Briton pleads for life; UK stands firm

MANCHESTER The British and Irish governments said on Monday they would not accept the demands of a British man who has been held in a prison in Ireland since 1996, saying he must serve his full sentence.

The man, who is now 40, was arrested in 1996 after being accused of a 1994 murder in Ireland. He has been held in a prison in Ireland since then. The British and Irish governments said they would not accept his demands for a life sentence. They said he must serve his full sentence.

All systems go for flood project-DPWH

By James L. King

MANILA, Jan. 9 (AP) — The Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) has approved the design and construction of a flood control system for the city of Manila, a project that will cost $1.5 billion, DPWH Secretary Jesse M. Arana said today.

The project, which is the first of a series of flood control projects in the city, will involve the construction of a 1.5-kilometer-long flood control system along the city's coast. The system will include a 1.5-kilometer-long dike, a 1.5-kilometer-long levee, and a 1.5-kilometer-long flood control system.

DA to oppose non-tariff barriers on tuna exports

By Christa M. Reyes

MANILA, Philippines — The Department of Agriculture (DA) is opposing the proposed non-tariff barriers (NTBs) on tuna exports to the United States, which the US Trade Representative (USTR) is seeking to lift.

DA officials inspect tuna exports.

The DA is concerned that the removal of NTBs will lead to a significant loss of revenue for the government, as well as a decline in the quality of the tuna exports. The DA is also worried that the removal of NTBs will lead to a loss of jobs for the fishermen and the processing industry.

SERENA WILLIAMS

Serena's denim or Sharapova's tank dress?

RECENTLY, for several nights, I would sleep with one eye open and awake to Agassi, Roddick or whoever was locking butt in court.

LIFE- STYLED

Thelma Stason
San Juan

It was the US Open, the last season of the year when tennis fanatics forego sleep and gladly wear eyebags just to watch their post-modern-day gladiators slug it out.

Of course, the fights were a dud, compared to the cliff-hanger semi and quarters, but still the action was irresistible on and also off court. The latter was thanks to Serena Williams, who believes she should be winning in fashion design as well.

Style-watching on the tennis circuit has never been better. I've always been partial to Wimbledon's all-white, and like many traditionalists, I've always believed that there's nothing like white in tennis.

But then after the Williams sisters, the Russians invaded—the long-legged, long-torsoed, long-tressed beauties on the court who are fashion ramp material as well. I don't mean Kournikova, for unlike the men, I'm not into Anna Kournikova (I don't even care to spell her name right). I mean Maria Sharapova and her kind.

But before we go to Maria, let's follow the pecking order: The Williams first.

Serena certainly knew how to serve up a heavy dose of style. She wore Nike's stud-trimmed denim tank top and pleated skirt, knee-high black patent leather warm-up boots. It was glorious denim most of the time—admittedly the first time denim had a romp on the tennis court.

And then she lost.

Her sister Venus stuck to her Reebok endorsement (the biggest sports fashion deal ever, if I remember right), which I learned, no longer holds but she still wears nonetheless. Her Reebok tank dress, preferably in pink, looked all right except that she kept on tugging at the décolletage every time she'd serve that you wondered if it was uncomfortable.

Justine Henin-Hardenne (she lost—what's the world coming to?) had her Adidas polo shirt and skirt with its trademark aqua stripes.

Jennifer Capriati, for her part, was in pink Fila—and, in her match against Serena, wore a bit of makeup.

While I love Serena's superhuman tennis, I'm not sure I love the way she dresses on and off court. Too frilly for tennis.

In my mind, tennis fashion already had had its revolution for the century, and it was done

Women have long been told to look after their skin. But the advice has often been vague and unhelpful.

Now, as the menopause hits, the advice is becoming more specific. And it's not just about the skin, but also about the hair and nails.

For the first time, there's a skincare line that's specifically designed for women in their 40s and 50s.

It's called Myriad Beningrose, and it's the first of its kind. It's a skincare line that's specifically designed for women in their 40s and 50s.
